Bilateral Investment Treaties

United Nations
New York and Geneva, 2000

NOTE

UNCTAD serves as the focal point within the United Nations Secretariat for all matters related to foreign direct investment and transnational corporations. In the past, the Programme on Transnational Corporations was carried out by the United Nations Centre on Transnational Corporations (1975-1992) and the Transnational Corporations and Management Division of the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Development (1992-1993). In 1993, the Programme was transferred to the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development. UNCTAD seeks to further the understanding of the nature of transnational corporations and their contribution to development and to create an enabling environment for international investment and enterprise development. UNCTAD's work is carried out through intergovernmental deliberations, technical assistance activities, seminars, workshops and conferences.

The term "country" as used in this study also refers, as appropriate, to territories or areas; the designations employed and the presentation of the material do not imply the expression of any opinion whatsoever on the part of the Secretariat of the United Nations concerning the legal status of any country, territory, city or area or of its authorities, or concerning the delimitation of its frontiers or boundaries. In addition, the designations of country groups are intended solely for statistical or analytical convenience and do not necessarily express a judgement about the stage of development reached by a particular country or area in the development process.

The following symbols have been used in the tables:

Two dots (..) indicate that data are not available or are not separately reported. Rows in tables have been omitted in those cases where no data are available for any of the elements in the row;

A dash (-) indicates that the item is equal to zero or its value is negligible;

A blank in a table indicates that the item is not applicable, unless otherwise indicated.

A slash (/) between dates representing years, e.g., 1994/95, indicates a financial year;

Use of a hyphen (-) between dates representing years, e.g., 1994-1995, signifies the full period involved, including the beginning and end years.

Reference to "dollars" ($) means United States dollars, unless otherwise indicated.

Annual rates of growth or change, unless otherwise stated, refer to annual compound rates.

Details and percentages in tables do not necessarily add to totals because of rounding.

The material contained in this study may be freely quoted with appropriate acknowledgement.

Preface

Today, all countries seek foreign direct investment to advance their development process. They have therefore shown keen interest in promoting and protecting such investment through national and international policy instruments. Part of these efforts involve the adoption of bilateral treaties for the promotion and protection of foreign investment.

The United Nations has analysed bilateral investment treaties over the years as part of its work on foreign direct investment, presently carried out by the Division on Investment, Technology and Enterprise Development of the United Nations Conference on Trade and Development (UNCTAD). It has published two comprehensive analytical studies on this subject, in 1988 and 1998. It also updates the list of bilateral investment treaties and monitors developments on an annual basis; the updates are reported in various publications, notably the World Investment Report and International Investment Instruments: A Compendium. From time to time, UNCTAD publishes a comprehensive list of bilateral investment treaties. It furthermore assists developing countries that so request in the organization of events during which bilateral investment treaties can be negotiated.

The 1990s saw a rapid increase in the number of bilateral investment treaties, and, by the end of the decade, the universe of these treaties looked dramatically different from that of previous decades. The number of treaties quintupled during the decade, rising from 385 at the end of the 1980s to 1,857 at the end of the 1990s. The number of countries involved in bilateral investment treaties reached 173. At the same time, the number of such treaties concluded by developing countries and Central and Eastern European countries have between themselves experienced a sharp increase, from 63 at the end of the 1980s to 833 at the end of the 1990s. All of this suggests that bilateral investment treaties are playing an increasingly important role in international investment relations worldwide, including in South-South cooperation.

Preface

The present booklet is intended to document these trends and provide a snapshot of the universe of bilateral investment treaties signed by the end of 1999. The list of bilateral investment treaties is preceded by a brief introduction highlighting significant recent developments. It is meant to complement the analytical and technical cooperation work on bilateral investment treaties being undertaken by UNCTAD.

The booklet was prepared by Abraham Negash under the guidance of Victoria Aranda and the overall direction of Anh-Nga Tran-Nguyen and Karl P. Sauvant. Production of the booklet was carried out by Florence Hudry.

Introduction

Bilateral investment treaties (BITs) constitute to date the most important instrument for the international protection of foreign investment. Since the adoption of the first BIT in 1959, the number of such treaties has grown steadily and, by the end of 1999, reached a total of 1,857. The most dramatic increase took place during the 1990s, when their number quintupled (figure 1).

Source: UNCTAD database on BITs.

Initially, BITs were concluded between a developed and a developing country, usually at the initiative of the developed country. The developed country — typically a capital exporting country — entered into a BIT with a developing country — typically a capital importing country — in order to secure additional and higher standards of legal protection and guarantees for the investments of its firms than those offered under national laws. The developing country, on the other hand, would sign a BIT as one of the elements of a favourable climate to attract foreign investors.

This pattern has changed since the late 1980s and especially in the 1990s, as developing countries and economies in transition began to sign BITs between themselves in great numbers (box). As a result, the dividing line for BIT partners between capital exporting and capital importing countries no longer holds true and, in many instances, countries approach BITs with the dual purpose of protecting their outward investments to, while attracting inward investment from, the other BIT partner. Of course, the degree of emphasis that countries place on each of these objectives varies considerably from BIT to BIT.

Box. UNCTAD's support for BITs and DTTs

The UNCTAD Secretariat has launched an initiative aimed at strengthening investment cooperation between developing countries by providing them an opportunity to negotiate bilateral investment treaties (BITs) and bilateral treaties for the avoidance of double taxation of income and capital (DTTs). To that effect, the UNCTAD Secretariat facilitates meetings between interested countries for the negotiation and initialisation of such treaties, to be signed and ratified in accordance with internal and diplomatic rules and practices in force in each country.

- In January 1999, the UNCTAD Secretariat, together with the Group of Fifteen (G-15) and UNDP, hosted the first meeting of BIT negotiators of interested members of the G-15 near Geneva. It resulted in the conclusion of three BITs. In addition, consolidated texts of two BITs were prepared reflecting consensus ad referendum on all key issues, as well as consolidated texts of three BITs reflecting consensus ad referendum on most issues.
- A round of DTT negotiations was organized in December 1999 in Colombo, Sri Lanka, with the G-15 and the United Nations Department of Economic and Social Affairs (DESA). One DTT was initialled, two memoranda of understanding were concluded and one existing DTT was reviewed.

Box (continued)

- The next round of BITs negotiations, organized in Geneva in January 2000, brought together six developing countries and economies in transition. As a result, eight BITs were initialled and three were signed in February 2000 in Bangkok during UNCTAD X.
- At the request of one developing country, a round of BIT negotiations between that country and a group of selected countries took place in Lima, Peru, in March 2000. This event resulted in two initialled BITs.
- Finally, in June 2000, the UNCTAD Secretariat organized a round of negotiations in Sapporo, Japan, hosted by the Government of Japan. This event brought together eleven countries from Africa, Asia and Latin America, and resulted in the finalization of 22 BITs among themselves.

The next negotiating event is scheduled to take place in January 2001 in Geneva, focusing on BIT negotiations by least developed countries. It is expected that the agreements concluded during this round would be signed on the occasion of the LDC-III Conference in May 2001.

While facilitating the organization of these rounds of negotiations, the UNCTAD Secretariat provides logistical assistance and, as requested, technical advice based on UNCTAD's expertise and experience in this area. Resource persons are made available upon request. The UNCTAD secretariat does not participate in the negotiations.

The facilitation of BIT and DTT negotiations forms part of a broader Programme on International Investment Agreement aimed at helping developing countries participate as effectively as possible in international discussions or negotiations on investment.

By the end of 1999, out of the total 1,857 BITs, 737 (40 per cent) were between developed and developing countries (compared with 260 — or 68 per cent — at the end of 1989), 476 (26 per cent) between developing countries (compared with 40 — or 10 per cent — at the end of 1989), 253 (14 per cent) between developing and Central and Eastern European countries (compared with 23 — or 6 per cent — at the end of 1989), 276 (15 per cent) between developed and Central and Eastern European countries (compared with 51 — or 13 per cent — at the end of 1989), and 104 (6 per cent) between Central and Eastern European countries (none at the end of 1989) (figures 2 and 3). There are only a few (11) BITs between developed countries, the reason being that investment relations among developed countries are dealt with in a number of instruments adopted under the auspices of the OECD, to which all developed countries belong.

It is not only the number of BITs that has been growing, but also the number of countries involved, from 2 at the end of the 1950s to 48 at the end of the 1960s, 69 at the end of the 1970s, 102 at the end of the 1980s, and a total of 173 at the end of the 1990s, including countries from all regions (table and figure 4).

Box (concluded)

This work includes capacity-building seminars, regional symposia, training courses, dialogues between negotiators and groups of civil society and the preparation of a series of papers on Issues in International Investment Agreements.

The organization of these events is financially supported by UNCTAD's Trust Fund on International Investment Agreements, financed by contributions from the European Commission, France, Germany, Japan, the Netherlands, Norway, Switzerland and the United Kingdom. The round of negotiations in Peru was further supported by the Government of Canada.

In the 1990s, the regional distribution of participating countries was also quite different from that of previous decades, comprising 41 countries from Africa (in contrast with 21 in the 1980s), 46 from developing Asia and the Pacific (18 in the 1980s), 27 from Latin America and the Caribbean (15 in the 1980s), 24 developed countries (22 in the 1980s), and 19 Central and Eastern European countries (7 in the 1980s).

African countries were more actively involved in BIT practice during the 1960s than any other region. They have since continued to conclude BITs, especially during the 1990s, when the number of BITs increased by 279, from 149 at the end of 1989 to a total of 428. Of these, 221 treaties were concluded with developed countries (172 with countries members of the European Union), 168 with developing countries (44 between African countries themselves), 108 with Asian countries, 16 with Latin American and Caribbean countries, and 39 with Central and Eastern European countries.

Among developing regions, the countries of the Asia and Pacific region have concluded the largest number of BITs, with a total of 842 at the end of 1999.¹ Of these, 697 BITs were concluded during the 1990s alone, in contrast with the 1980s in which only 98 BITs were signed. The countries of South, East and South-East Asia have signed 523 BITs (74 between themselves); those of Central Asia 158 (15 between themselves); those of West Asia 251 (16 between themselves); and those of the Pacific 6 (none between themselves). The recent sharp growth of BITs in the region is partly explained by

The Latin American countries did not start signing BITs until the late 1980s. Changes in the development strategies of the countries in the region have since led to a rapid growth of BITs, to reach a total of 300 treaties, 93 per cent of which were signed during the 1990s. Together with the 82 BITs signed by the Caribbean countries — which, however, had started signing BITs much earlier — they have concluded a total of 366 BITs,³ of which 205 with developed countries, mainly from Western Europe (179). The rest were signed with developing countries — 61 between countries of the region itself, 46 with Asian countries and 16 with African countries — and 38 with Central and Eastern European countries.

The Central and Eastern European countries have signed 633 BITs, of which 104 were concluded between themselves (all signed during the 1990s), 253 with developing countries, and 276 with the developed countries. More than 75 per cent of the BITs with developed countries were signed with members of the European Union, mostly in the 1990s. Most of the BITs with developing countries are with countries of the Asian region (176, of which 91 with South, East and South-East Asia, 53 with West Asia and 32 with Central Asia), followed by Latin America and the Caribbean (38) and Africa (39) (figure 5).

Overall, Western European countries have concluded the largest number of BITs (904), representing 49 per cent of all BITs. Of these, 658 BITs, representing 73 per cent of the total, were concluded with developing countries — 270 with Asia (of which 160 with South, East and South-East Asia), 209 with Africa, and 179 with Latin America and the Caribbean. A total of 235 were concluded with Central and Eastern European countries. They have also concluded 9 treaties between themselves.

North America and Japan were relative latecomers to the BIT practice — although the United States and, to a lesser extent, Japan were earlier engaged in concluding Friendship, Commerce and

Navigation treaties (which contained provisions on investment) and, over the years, both Canada and the United States have signed numerous investment guarantee agreements. However, they picked up speed during the 1980s and especially the 1990s, and have now concluded 75 BITs (24 by Canada, 8 by Japan and 43 by the United States), of which 11 were concluded with African countries, 21 with Asian countries, 21 with Latin American and Caribbean countries, and 22 with Central and Eastern European countries.

Among developed countries, Germany continues to be the country with the largest number of BITs concluded (124), followed by Switzerland (95), and France and the United Kingdom with 92 BITs each. Among developing countries and Central and Eastern European countries, China has concluded the largest number of BITs (94), followed by Romania (90) and Egypt (84) (figures 6 and 7).

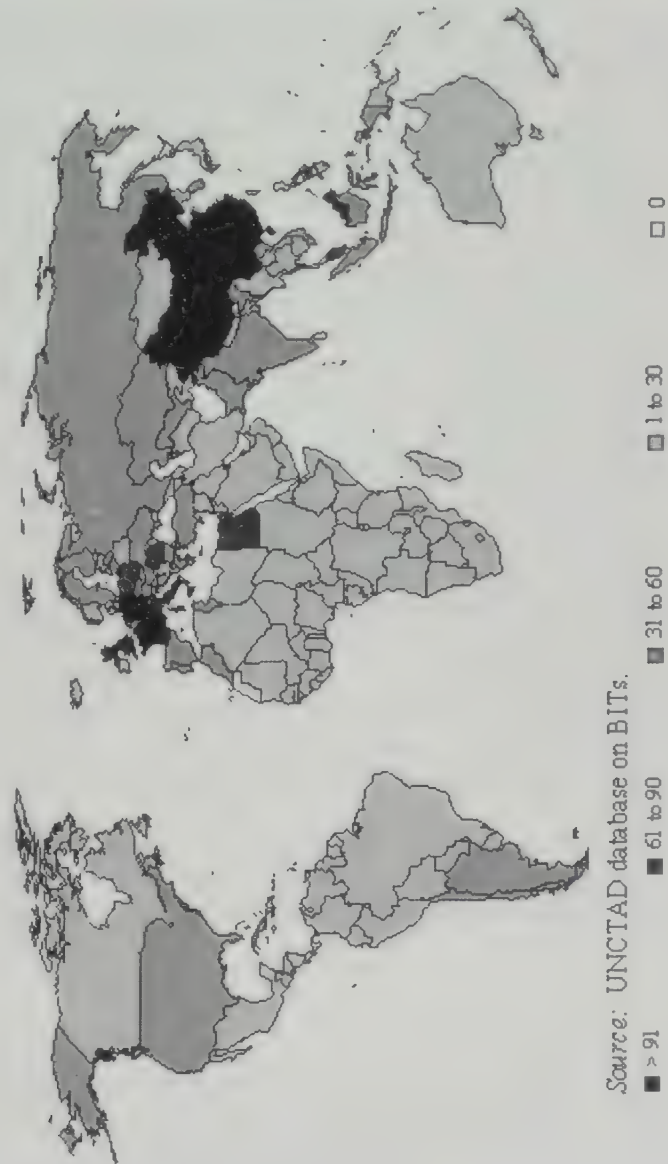

These trends are the result of various factors, notably a clear shift in development strategies on the part of most developing countries, which have given increased importance to the role of FDI; the move towards a free market economy system in Central and Eastern Europe; and the emergence of new countries on the international scene.

The basic features of BITs, including their objectives, format and broad principles underlying the agreements, have changed little over the years.⁴ Their main provisions typically deal with the scope and definition of foreign investment (which in most cases includes tangible and intangible assets, direct as well as portfolio investments, and existing as well as new investments); admission of investments; national and most-favoured-nation treatment; fair and equitable treatment; guarantees and compensation in respect of expropriation and compensation for war and civil disturbances; guarantees of free transfer of funds and repatriation of capital and profits; subrogation on insurance claims; and dispute-settlement provisions, both State-to-State and investor-to-State. In addition, some BITs include provisions regarding transparency of national laws; performance requirements; entry and sojourn of foreign personnel; general exceptions; and extension of national and most-favoured-nation-treatment to the entry and establishment of investments. Within these broad themes, the exact content of BIT provisions varies considerably, even between BITs signed by the same country, reflecting different approaches as well as bargaining positions. Over the years, as practice develops, some provisions in BITs have tended to become more elaborated.

BITs can have an influence in the development of regional and multilateral investment instruments. Sometimes, model BITs have been prepared by individual countries that reflect their positions and
